

Daniel Steegmann Mangrané's research is composed of subtle yet crude experiments that question the relationship between language and the world. Although primarily conceptual, his installations engage with the imagination of the spectator and exhibit a strong concern with the existence of everything we see, but especially on everything that we do not see.

Mangrané's work often traces the boundary where nature meets artifice. Lines, circles and rhombuses are drawn, cut and projected onto leaves; the delicate symmetry of branches is split in two. These precise interventions hold a powerful force of attraction: a moment of uncertainty between what is contrived and what is natural. In each of Steegmann Mangrané's intricate compositions, we get to experience that, far from being distinct, the organic and the geometric, the vital and the abstract, define each other.

MACBA, Barcelona
A Leaf Shapes the Eye

Having lived in Rio de Janeiro for two decades, Steegmann Mangrané understands the rainforest as more than just a place, but as a living being that embodies the complexities of our contemporary world, whether they be environmental, political, or social, and serves as a metaphor for the delicate balance and interconnectedness of all things. Climate change further reminds us that we are all part of the same organism and entangled within a complex network of relationships of mutual transformation.

The artist's work is greatly influenced by Brazilian Neo-Concrete artists. Like them, Steegmann Mangrané considers sensory engagement as a socio-political and democratic entry point to the work, dissolving boundaries that attempt to compartmentalize our experience of the world and transforming the exhibition from an inanimate object-to-be-seen into an ever-changing entity to be experienced with our bodies and all our senses.

Employing ostensibly opposite ideas such as belonging and dissolution or opacity and transparency, the artist creates immersive environments by materializing liminal states in which the visual and the material coalesce. (...) Echoing the use of bodily, perceptual and sensorial strategies as a means of political participation by such 1960s Brazilian artists as Lygia Clark and Hélio Oiticica, Steegmann Mangrané creates sensual, playful situations, which overcome artificial dualisms that have historically defined our reading of the world. According to him, such dichotomies are not only false but also hierarchical, placing mind above body, rational thought above emotion, and culture above nature, ultimately enabling noxious worldviews. In opposition, Steegmann Mangrané proposes an integrated approach to address the critical moment of ecological crisis we are currently experiencing.

Bourse de Commerce, Paris

Avant l'Orage

The cycle of exhibitions presented by the Pinault Collection entitled Avant l'orage, invites visitors on a journey from shadow to light, through installations and works, some iconic, others new, by some fifteen artists, throughout the spaces of the Bourse de Commerce. Against the backdrop of the climate crisis, in the urgency of the present, before the storm breaks again, the artists in the exhibition invent unusual ecosystems that contain new seasons.

Avant l'orage, Bourse de Commerce, Paris, France, 2023

The relational nature of our humanity is also expressed in Daniel Steegmann Mangrané's dialogue with Cy Twombly (...) The Spanish artist delights in this by deploying an ensemble of fragile situations, simple threads stretched to house leaves and branches, luminous filaments responding to the fluctuations of the climate as well as to the presence of visitors.

Avant l'orage, Bourse de Commerce, Paris, France, 2023

2022 Nordnorsk Kunstmuseum Tromsø, Tromsø

Breathing Lines

Daniel Steegmann Mangrané explores atmospheres that undermine the traditional boundaries between nature and culture, subjects and objects. In a constant reference to the tropics, in particular the Amazon rainforest, his work proposes new narratives that demonstrate the interconnectedness of diverse ecological systems. Through films, sculptures, drawings and installations, the artist challenges us to reflect on the complex dynamics between the elements that surround us and the environmental challenges that exist.

Breathing Lines, Nordnorsk Kunstmuseum Tromsø, Tromsø, Norway, 2023

In Breathing Lines, Steegmann Mangrané presents a series of works that poetically transform the space through architectural, lighting and sound interventions. In the artist's words:

"The museum space can no longer be a space for the accumulation of artifacts, isolated and protected from the outside world, but rather a space where our relationship to objects and reality is reconfigured."

Breathing Lines, Nordnorsk Kunstmuseum Tromsø, Tromsø, Norway, 2023

Pirelli Hangar Bicocca, Milan

A Leaf-Shaped Animal Draws The Hand

The exhibition narrative unfolds along the site-specific installation Phantom Architecture (2019), composed of different partitions in semi-transparent white material that redefine the industrial character of Pirelli HangarBicocca and enclose and reveal the works on display. Like fluctuating membranes, the curtains divide the space into different areas while permitting, by means of their transparency, a view of different volumes and depths. Alluding to the studies on light and environments in the United States by artists such as Robert Irwin in the 1970s, Steegmann Mangrané created a display that combines tangible experiences with immaterial situations, in which the visitor's body becomes part of the landscape. On the whole, the installation creates a dialogue with current research in architecture.

Daniel Steegmann Mangrané, A Leaf-Shaped Animal Draws The Hand, Pirelli HangarBicocca, Milan, 2019

Daniel Steegmann Mangrané, A Leaf-Shaped Animal Draws The Hand, Pirelli HangarBicocca, Milan, 2019

If for Western ontologies nature is the common ground from where everything else is differentiated, for Amerindian cosmologies the common ground that everything shares is humanity: according to this perception everything is people.

A "point of view" is then not something that subjects have over objects, but, rather, it is the point of view that creates the subject, gives it agency and defines its ontological actuality. Depending from which perspective it is seen, an object can be the incarnation of a divinity, a religious instrument, or just a pot. Similarly, a person changes depending on who he/she is looked at by. For the artist this theory can open a new way of defining art: "Since everything is people, the traditional division of nature-culture applies in a completely new way. If there are no longer fixed objects and subjects, there are no longer artworks and viewers, but dynamic relations of mutual transformation. I think this is a much more compelling, engaging, and intriguing way to think about art."

"When I first had the idea for the curtains, I was making drawings opposing a formless shape to very regular patterns, which I thought could be some metal sculptures. It was a very incipient idea but somehow the rigidity of the grid was frustrating.

Then those curtains came to mind. They are very common in the Mediterranean, they are colorful and they make this nice noise when you cross them.

It was the right material for dealing with notions of corporeality and incorporeality, materiality and immateriality, tridimensional experience and flat surface... the work changes as you traverse the different layers, and you grow more and more aware of your body and your movement in a space that you need to constantly negotiate."

I want him or her to be totally taken by the work or by the exhibition. I think deeply about how I can enhance the experience, and how I can steal the maximum amount of time and attention. (...) You think with your body and with your movement, and the mind is a muscle. So by changing the conditions of the viewer's body, you can change his state of mind, the way one acts or interacts, your perception of space and scale."
