

Lucas Arruda

b. 1983, São Paulo, Brazil
lives and works in São Paulo

Lucas Arruda focuses on the landscape genre, using an approach that explores complex mental states and our experience of light and perception rather than specific locations – obstinately thinking and experimenting with our capacity of living through the mediation of light and the gaze. Arruda's scenery exists at the point of tension between abstraction and figuration, between apparition and emptiness. With each gaze, experiences are delineated through a process of constructing and reconstructing memories, as if the arrangement of color fields has interacted with intangible landscapes and felt sensations. As viewers move above and below horizon lines, atmospheres laden with visual and metaphysical questions unfold. Between sky and earth, the ethereal and solid, imagination and reality, meditative contemplation finds its routine while following an endless cycle of sublimation and deposition of matter.

Lucas Arruda (b. 1983, São Paulo, Brazil) lives and works in São Paulo.

He has had solo exhibitions at Mendes Wood DM, Casa Iramaia, São Paulo (2025); Carré d'Art – Musée d'art contemporain de Nîmes, Nîmes (2025); Musée D'Orsay, Paris (2025); Fondazione Sandretto Re Rebaudengo, Madrid (2023); Instituto Tomie Ohtake, São Paulo (2022); Fundação Iberê Camargo, Porto Alegre (2021); Pond Society, Shanghai (2020); Fridericianum, Kassel (2019); Cahiers d'Art, Paris (2018); Indipendenza, Rome (2016); Lulu, Mexico City (2015); Pivô, São Paulo (2015).

Eclipse, Mendes Wood DM, Casa Iramaia, 2025

It turns out that the visible, in Arruda, can only be approached obliquely, through veils and screens that make it bearable to contemplate. Light, his persistent interest, is not exactly an available and abundant source that bathes the scene, affirming everything as surface; that direct sunlight of the classical pictorial tradition. On the contrary, it is a veiled phenomenon that emerges from the background – from the depths of the ground or the painted atmosphere, like a latent incandescence waiting to be revealed. It needs to be conquered (literally un-covered) through a process that rever-ses the additive logic of painting: it often comes to the surface through the removal of paint, as if the painter were engraving or sculpting not on stone, but on the chromatic material itself, dosing its appearance. With the back of the brush or a piece of cloth, he scratches, scrapes, and delicately removes the thick layers of paint he previously added, in a play between layering and removing, veiling and revealing, until something lights up in the depths of the surface.

Deserto-Modelo, Carré d'Art - Musée d'art contemporain de Nîmes, Nîmes, 2025

This significant retrospective of works by Lucas Arruda features paintings, films, and installations from different periods of his career, including some produced specifically for the occasion. The exhibition, which will occupy the entire floor of the temporary spaces, will showcase the different aspects of his practice. Arruda is fundamentally concerned with landscape, human thought, and the experimentation of our capacity to live through the mediation of light and the gaze. His landscapes exist at the point of tension between abstraction and figuration, between appearance and emptiness.

Deserto-Modelo

Indipendenza presented the first solo exhibition in Italy by Lucas Arruda. The exhibit is the outcome of a one-month residency during which the artist has created new oil paintings and light installations that are presented alongside older works to show the path of an artist whose pictorial practice hides a remarkable richness of meanings and suggestions.

Deserto-Modelo

At Pivô's context Arruda's work achieves new dimensions and is directed into an installation process. His already known research on imagined horizons and the passage of time in nature is extrapolated into the environment, reacting to the architectural particularities of this exhibition space. By entering the enclosed room with a meticulously controlled lighting, the visitor is completely involved within the artist's universe, where landscapes are points of departure for a deeper immersion into questions such as the notion of permanence, time's relentlessness and the intensity of human emotions.

Just like a navigator, Arruda also begins his journey of creating a painting by marking a horizon line to orient himself within the canvas. While the word horizon derives from the Greek for 'separating circle,' I would argue that when viewed together, Arruda's works allow us to connect the circle of the planet in our imagination by stitching together endless horizons seen by endless pairs of eyes looking towards the edges of what we perceive of our planet at any given time. Almost like stitching together a giant panorama image. We can recognize all times of day and night across his practice. Arruda makes us want to see beyond what is visibly there. Horizons push our perceptual limits, and if we look long enough, we can perceive almost magical phenomena like the "green flash" as the rising or setting sun hits the horizon, or watching the sun and moon cross each other in an eclipse. Looking at the horizon is a ritual of standing still, and connecting both to the now and to the infinite. His work makes us question the limits of what is possible, evoking an essence of possibility by painting open-endedness.
