

Marina Perez Simão

b. 1980, Vitória, Brazil
lives and works in São Paulo

Marina Perez Simão explores the boundaries of abstraction, evoking a sense of awe by layering and juxtaposing colors to trap light, creating compositions that transcend the tangible world in a practice dedicated to exploring new possibilities and new states of matter. Focusing on light and movement, the artist creates paintings that, rather than serve reality, follow their own internal logic, representing alternate worlds and possibilities.

Along her exploration of “painting where words fail,” she, however, often draws from natural and geological phenomena, shifting colors at a certain hour of the day, or other such perceptions and reception of light – ones often bound to experiences of places, methods, states of mind. Always starting with drawings and then watercolors, she builds structures that evolve into her paintings’ intricate compositions.

Notably, Simão’s approach is marked by a dynamic, almost musical complexity, blending natural and abstract elements to create interior and exterior landscapes. The artist describes her series as a form of dancing between paintings, with each work existing independently yet in relation to others, like a family or group of friends. This allows the artist’s works to remain open, shifting, and alive. For Simão, a painting is “never one thing or another.” As curator Diana Campbell Betancourt remarks on the ever-apparent sense of oneness Simão time and time again achieves, “On the atomic level, there is no difference between inside, outside, you, her, or me.”

Marina Perez Simão (b. 1980, Vitória, Brazil) lives and works in São Paulo.

Diapasão

The way Marina Perez Simão approaches scale, composition, and movement invites us into a synesthetic relationship with color. As our gaze sinks into the chromatic expanse of her works, we are swept up by fluid suggestions of temperature, vibration, and taste: a visual, tactile, acoustic, and olfactory/ gustatory experience, from which memories and reactions emerge directly on the skin, in the ears, through the strands of hair.

Diffusion, Mendes Wood DM, Paris, 2025

Diffusion is defined as the net movement of anything, from the invisible atomic level to the perceivable spread of information, and it is an important process in all living things enabling substances to move in and out of cells. It is also the title of the artist's first solo exhibition in Paris, where memories of her experience studying in this city twenty years ago diffuse into her experience of the eighteenth-century hôtel particulier space of the gallery Mendes Wood DM. Simão describes this new series of works as the most evocative of "landscape" in her practice to date. She thinks about landscape more as conjuring a space or a place, as opposed to describing an existing place, and plays with traditional elements of landscape painting like using several horizon lines and never using a vanishing point. However, the use of the word "landscape" in describing this new body of work seems to be a contradiction, given that she introduces us to a new format of vertically oriented paintings in the show (inspired in part by the vertically oriented proportions of the gallery); but the artist sees paradoxes as part of a dynamic process of seeking clarity. She is always thinking about inner and outer space, and "diffusion" relates to the particularities of the Mendes Wood DM Paris gallery space, acclimatizing it to evoke the feelings she gets when working in her studio in São Paulo.

Due to their open design, Simão's works also allow for figurative associations and play with art historical epochs. Simão's colour surfaces bulge, fill and empty like breathing, organic systems. At the same time, the forms stretch across the canvas like landscapes. Mountain range-like features draw a horizon, sky compositions or moments reminiscent of paths, lakes or fields. Sceneries are created that are reminiscent of classical landscape depictions from art history. Simão constantly creates new spaces in the pictures. Wave-like forms, which seem to be on the verge of collapse, sometimes form cave-like or rock-like spatial constructions. The landscapes can be understood as metaphors for inner landscapes, composed of feelings and emotions and filled with their own biographical content.

In the paintings for her with Pace in LA — which takes the scientific name for the nightshades family of plants as its title — the artist meditates on the phenomenological effects of different conditions of light and its absence. In a departure from her past works, Simão has adopted a palette of deep, dark colors for her new landscapes, combining multiple hues at a time to emulate the nuances of bioluminescence. Elaborating upon her recent experiments with traditional Florentine fresco techniques for a painting she showed this year in São Paulo, Simão has realized many of these landscapes at grander scales than she has ever worked in before, with two monumental compositions each extending more than 12-feet in width. As part of her process for making these paintings, she experiments with forms in watercolors and smaller scales, bringing a confident intuition to her final, large-scale compositions.

Marina Perez Simão, Villa Era, Vigliano Biellese, 2023

Marina Perez Simão's work shatters earthbound limits and sets us adrift on a voyage into universes of ambivalence, where everything floats, freed from the weight of memory and any perceived need to make a judgement or decide... In a world where we are supposed to know everything through the touch of a screen, the artist tries to conjure the wonder and awe that comes with experiencing a sense of being that was previously unthinkable. Her paintings open up possibilities for new states of matter beyond known solids, liquids, gases and plasmas.

5 Paintings, Mendes Wood DM, São Paulo, 2022

There is, it would seem, a paradox between the name of the exhibition and what is revealed in the works. On the one hand, we have the laconic title 5 Paintings and, on the other hand, we have a series of works in which the generosity of forms and colors do not evoke synthesis, but rather a baroque visuality. Therefore, it becomes a challenge to unravel the links with nature, both concise and eloquent, which characterize the practice of Marina Perez Simão.

This exhibition coincides with the launch of a major artist monograph published by Rizzoli featuring new texts by Osman Can Yerebakan and Fernanda Brenner. At stake in Marina Perez Simão's practice is an investigation of the metaphysical. Her work hovers in the liminal space between abstraction and figuration, expertly handling colour, form, and texture to convey the feeling of a landscape and the power of nature. Working across painting, drawing, and collage, Simão cites figures such as Luchita Hurtado, Georgia O'Keefe, and Agnes Pelton as key artistic inspirations.

In addition to supporting the development of contemporary art in China, Sifang Art Museum is also committed to bringing cutting-edge art creations from around the world to Nanjing, to promote dialogue and understanding among cultures and people. In this particular era of isolation and division fostered by the pandemic, encounters with the distant become even more important. The museum hopes that Simão's mysterious, vibrant and poetic works will bring warmth and enlightenment from the most distant reaches of the imagination to this still unsettled autumn.

Éveils Maritimes

Éveils Maritimes, Mendes Wood DM, Brussels, 2020

The imagery found in the work of Marina Perez Simão emerges from various literary sources, which are often made explicit in her exhibition titles. However, rather than directly referencing these sources, her paintings materialize through a process of loose transposition of word into image that preserve different moods, intensities and symbolisms that suggest non-linear and open-ended narratives. The works presented in Éveils Maritimes specifically revolve around Arthur Rimbaud's 1871 Le Bateau Ivre (The Drunken Boat), a poem written from the viewpoint of a boat that is adrift in the open sea after having lost its haulers - a kind of parable about life and art in which loss of control leads to spiritual or aesthetic redemption. Rimbaud's account of the boat's journey seamlessly merges images of annihilation and creation, perhaps suggesting that the forces of freedom and destruction are inextricably bound.

Likewise, always inhabiting a zone of indefinición, the interior worlds created by Marina Perez Simão reject the assertiveness of traditional binary categories, and in doing so are able to get closer to a truer picture of human experience where the pulsations of life and death are constantly intertwined.
